The biological behavior of keratinizing carcinomas with little or no dysplasia (KCIN) has been described to be similar to that of high-grade dysplasia keratinizing squamous cell carcinomas (KC). This study was designed to compare the clinicopathologic features of KCIN and KC to investigate whether the "no dysplasia" designation is a bona fide designation with no prognostic significance. This retrospective analysis of the University of Chicago Department of Oral Pathology files and the Cancer Registry files evaluated all cases of KCIN and KC received from 1976 to 1998. Thirty-five cases of KCIN and KC were identified and the clinical, radiographic, and histopathologic findings were abstracted. Three cases were excluded. Of the 32 cases included in the study, 18 (56%) were KCIN and 14 (44%) were KC. There was no significant difference in the frequency of patient age, site, differentiation, tumor stage, or tumor size between KCIN and KC (P =.39). The presence of perineural invasion (P =.02), lymph node metastasis (P =.04), and clinical T4 disease (P =.03) was more frequent in KC than in KCIN. The 2-year disease-specific survival rate was 100% for KCIN and 91.2% for KC. The differences in patient age, site, tumor differentiation, and tumor size are not clinically relevant, and this study demonstrates that KCIN and KC are not distinct entities. This study confirms the low rates of metastasis, the excellent prognosis, and the lack of histologic differentiation in KCIN and KC.[The effect of nickel hydroxide on the body of workers engaged in mining]. Sixteen workers were examined with respect to the content of nickel and cobalt in their blood and urine. The results of an immunochemical analysis of their hair showed that nickel hydroxide had been
